Scrooge Brown turns into Santa The Chancellor's welaidd plans could easily be undone, says Economics Ed itor Nevill Boyd Maunsell .

The Independent, London; Jul 15, 1998; Nevill Boyd Maunsell;

Start Page: 13

Abstract:

Since last May's general election Mr Gordon Brown projected himself in this unyielding mode, the "Iron Chancellor" who made a mantra of the word "prudent" until we wondered why he needed to protest so much. Sure enough, last month he revealed plans to re lax the limits on public spending as the next general election looms in sight.

Yesterday, though, he went one further. He took the occasion of his "Comprehensive Spending Review" to present himself as the fount of all the wonderful things the spending departments are going to buy over the next three years - with our money. Scrooge had miraculously re-branded himself as Santa.

From the start, this notion of having a review that was supposed to etch in stone the spending limits for every ministry for the next three years was evidently intended to spare the Chancellor and the Treasury the opprobrium of saying "no" up and down Wh itehall for the next two years. Whether it works is another matter.

News Features - Registered Holders Try Out Electronic Voting

Investor Relations Business; New York; Jun 8, 1998; Philip Scipio;

Start Page: 1
ISSN: 10921354

Abstract:

In its first season of providing electronic proxy voting services, Direct Report Corp. said more than four million shareholders at 17 public corporations had the option of voting their proxies electronically, instead of the traditional method of returning a vote by postal mail.

Of the 4 million shareholders with the electric voting option, 1.5 million returned votes and 200,000 of these shareholders, or 13%, voted electronically, using the company's Shareholder Direct Proxy, a telephone and Internet proxy voting service introduced this year through a joint venture with transfer agent Boston EquiServe.

- How are links created?
 1. Using ProQuest Direct with SiteBuilder capabilities.
 - Provides the tools needed to generate the link. The user then copies the link into their own page.
 2. On the fly.
 - User creates a master link and imbeds required parameters.
